INTERACTION DESIGN · WORKED EXAMPLE

Beat sheet: the bank that is a bar now

The story from the worked example table, written on the sheet. Blue is what you write.

One row per beat, in reading order. A beat is one moment where the page changes as the reader scrolls. Write your first and last beats first, then fill in the middle. The test for a row: "After this, the reader knows _____." If the answer repeats the row above, merge them. Ten rows a sheet: print another for beats 11 onwards.

#	What the reader sees Say what it is: photo, archive photo, video, drawing, chart, map, 3D.	What they now know Read this column top to bottom: it should tell the story.	What changed What happened on the page to get here.	The move Hold, reveal, swap, scrub, layer, respond, or none.	What they can do "Scroll", or the moment they act. Circle that row.
1	Full-screen photo of the bar on a Friday night. One line: "This was a bank for 120 years."	Where we are, and that it used to be something else.	Nothing. It is there when they arrive.
2	The same corner in an archive photo, 1905.	It was built as a bank.	The photo swapped.
3	A 1950s photo of a queue outside. A short paragraph.	It was the busiest building on the street.	Photo and text arrived.
4	A chart of bank branches closing across the country.	It is not only this one.	The chart drew itself.
5	The closing notice taped in the window. Photo.	When, and what customers were told.	A new photo arrived.
6	Ten seconds of video inside, during the refit.	What happened to the inside.	The video started.
(7)	The banking hall then and now, with a handle to drag between them.	The same room, and how different it is.	Nothing, until the reader drags it.
8	Back outside, today. Photo, one line.	What the street lost, and what it gained.	The last photo arrived.
9
10

What to notice

- Read “What they now know” on its own, top to bottom. It tells the whole piece. That is the test for yours.
- “What the reader sees” says what kind of thing it is: photo, archive photo, chart, video. That is your shopping list for pictures.
- Row 7 is circled. It is the one place the reader does something other than scroll.
- The last two columns are blank. Leave yours blank for now too.